Hollywood: Scene Of The Crime: A Self Guided Tour Of Tinseltown's Most Infamous Celebrity Crime Scenes By Eric McConnell

Did you know that The Black Dahlia lived two blocks north of Hollywood's new entertainment district? Or that you can still dine in the same restaurant at the same table Sharon Tate had her last meal? Which Hollywood legend died so broke that Frank Sinatra paid for his funeral? You would know all of this and more if you owned Hollywood: Scene of the Crime! This is a self guided driving tour of Hollywood's most infamous crime scenes complete with directions, background information and photos! The Black Dahlia, Marvin Gaye, Buggy Siegel, Marilyn Monroe, and many more are all inside this book! Many of Hollywood's most infamous landmarks remain untouched since their darkest hours. Ghosts of stone and steel, these buildings stand as silent witnesses to the tragedies that occurred inside. Take a trip off the beaten path and Tinseltown's darkside will come alive like you never imagined!

Editorial Review

About the Author

Eric McConnell was born in Washington DC. He discovered his love for writing while reading the venerable Washington Post every day with his parents during dinner. Eric's passion for writing led him to Pepperdine University where he graduated with a BA in Journalism. After graduation, he spent the early years of his writing career working on ad campaigns and screenplays. He was inspired to write this book when he learned that his apt in Glendale was less than two blocks from the home of the Hillside Strangler and that he was driving past the Black Dahlia Murder Scene every day on his way to work without knowing it.
