Editorial Review

From the Author

What would this world be like without the heart of a mother to teach her children?

How would this world survive without a mother's labor of love in the kitchen?

I dedicate this book to all the mothers who have chosen to homeschool. I was a single mother and homeschooled my daughters for fifteen years. My motto was: The worst day homeschooling was better than the best day in public school.

The second hardest decision after choosing to homeschool is deciding when is the right time to return to traditional school--if at all. My first daughter was homeschooled all the way through high school.

Regardless of where you are in your homeschooling journey, I hope you find Food for Thought: Simple and Easy Recipes for Homeschooling Families a cookbook that can encourage creativity. Each chapter has a Food for Thought introduction with homeschooling ideas. A Food for Thought quote accompanies each recipe to stimulate discussion. Many of the quotes come from people we studied, books we read, and from the Bible.

All of the recipes are easy, inexpensive (except for the grouper), and "a spice of variety." One chapter is devoted to the young cook. I hope you make fond memories in the kitchen that you will remember long after the food is eaten. Some of our best memories (and funniest) homeschooling days took place in the kitchen.

Homeschooling as a single mother was never easy, especially because I worked full time, but God gave me the strength and perseverance to keep at it for many years. Not only did my children learn a lot, but I also experienced God's grace. With God's help, anything is possible. The best recipe of all is love from the heart wrapped in prayer.
